Lot of possibilities to take part and get green accreditation/education

APPLY NOW! Starting from January, 2012

New for 2012 – GEI Academic and Masters courses. We can now offer a range of academic courses at all levels from CPD to Undergraduate and Post Doctoral Research and Study.

Our new ground breaking Masters Courses start in February 2012 and will be taught in the state of the Art Science Museum in Birmingham with Birmingham City University.

Our other courses will be run in association with other Universities, some in beautiful surroundings at our own training centre near Glastonbury and some courses at University of Oxford and also in our learning centre in Theale using the latest state of the art equipment and techniques.

We also offer Professional Practitioner Qualifications, Open Book Examinations GE (Green Economist) which can be taken at our Annual Green Economics Conference at University of Oxford in July or throughout the year and based on Handbook and Green Economics Practitioner's Guide Book.

All our students at all levels are encouraged to speak at our events and to write for our publications and to publish in our prestigious books and journals and most of them do so.

MSc Environmental Sustainability with Green Economics (with partner university BCU)

The Environmental Sustainability programme is designed to encourage and foster the skills needed for inter-disciplinary working amongst graduates and practicing professionals, drawn from a variety of backgrounds within the environmental sector. It explores the inter-relationships within and between economic, social and environmental systems, proposing that it is essential to have realistic, holistic and sustainable solutions to the way that our environment is shaped, used and managed. At the heart of these decisions will be the environmental managers, planners, consultants, designers, technologists and policy makers of the future.

The Green Economics theme of the Environmental Sustainability suite of courses is the result of a unique collaboration between Birmingham City University and the Green Economics Institute, utilizing the Institute's world-leading expertise to bring the cutting-edge of knowledge to the students. The philosophy of the course places the development of the green economy within and earth-wide, holistic context in the longer term and as a blueprint for 21st century economics practice in the shorter term. Students of this course will, for the first time at any University benefit from professional accreditation through the Institute.

Subject to normal approval processes, the course will commence in early 2012.

CPD (Continuous Professional Development)

We also offer Professional Practitioner Qualifications, Open Book Examinations GE (Green Economist) which can be taken at our Annual Green Economics Conference in July or throughout the year and based on our Handbook and Green Economics Practitioner's Guide Book.
